Based on your qualifications and experiences, briefly describe why your service on the Durham City Council would be beneficial to the City of Durham

I was born and raised in Durham. I moved away for college and early career development, but moved back to the area in 2019. Since then, I have worked as a civil engineer and on multiple projects that have come through our Planning Commission and City Council for approval. During that time, I have also served on the Planning Commission. These two experiences have given me a front row seat to see the inner workings of the planning department, the views of the residents of Durham, and the views of the private developers. It has been an eye-opening experience to see how each of these stakeholders have such varying opinions and motives, but yet the city still continues to function and grow. This is not an insult to Durham, but rather an observation of all cities and communities. They are complex, dynamic entities that are being pulled in all directions with no single solution that will satisfy all, or even half. It is that complexity that makes me want to be a part of the City Council. I have not been the most vocal commissioner, but I have taken the role seriously and understand the direction we provide plays a vital role in the changes the city will make over the coming decades, and I want to play a part in that continued growth.
